Summary

- Lattice plots are constructed with a single function call to a core lattice function (e.g. `xyplot`)

- Aspects like margins and spacing are automatically handled and defaults are usually sufficient

- The lattice system is ideal for creating conditioning plots where you examine the same kind of plot under many different conditions

- Panel functions can be specified/customized to modify what is plotted in each of the plot panels